--- Excerpt ---

"I knew you weren't asleep." Luke's deep voice vibrated against my skin, I could feel the rumble of each word through his chest.

My suspicions were correct. He knew I was in his bed when he walked in. He knew that his daughter's best friend was lying half-naked in the same room and he decided to climb under the sheets. I felt a thousand butterflies rumble within my anxious stomach. The warmth from between my legs started again, the slow pulses spreading across my cold body.

I curled into him, nudging myself into his chest as he hugged me. I felt so warm, so safe within his grasp. His strong arms wrapped me tight, pressing me against his strong chest. I could feel his heart begin to beat faster, almost in sync with mine. His mouth moved towards my neck - the warm breath dissipating the goosebumps rising from my skin. Each press against my skin, the warmth grew - spreading over more and more of my body. A tingling sensation left in the wake of his every kiss. I had to have him, more than ever.

Reaching towards my neck, I stroked my hands through his thick, dark hair. Pulling at his locks until I removed him from my neck and guided him towards my mouth. The first touch was electrifying. I was kissing my best friend's Dad, the man I had been dreaming about for so, so long. I could feel him, taste him, wrap him in my soft, velvety lips. I gingerly slid my head to the side as I embraced his strong kiss.
