Congressional Research Service Report for Congress

...The originating objective of copyright, as stated in the Constitution, was to promote the progress of science and the useful arts. Rewarding the labor of authors is viewed as furthering that objective. The Copyright Act serves this two-tier purpose by vesting in authors of protected works certain exclusive rights. The unauthorized use of copyrighted material constitutes an infringement of these rights, unless the use is excused by a statutory exception. By limiting these rights, the Copyright Act attempts to strike a fair balance between an author's exclusive rights and the public's interest in using copyrighted material. The fair use defense, a statutory exception to a copyright holder's exclusive rights, is integral to obtaining this balance, as it permits courts to avoid rigid application of a copyright holder's exclusive rights, when, on occasion, it would undermine the primary purpose of the Copyright Act.
The advent and spread of Internet technologies pose new challenges to Congress and the courts in maintaining a balance between the free flow of information over the Internet while still protecting intellectual property rights. The application of the fair use doctrine is one way courts endeavor to strike a proper balance....

Congressional Research Service

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) serves shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. CRS experts assist at every stage of the legislative process — from the early considerations that precede bill drafting, through committee hearings and floor debate, to the oversight of enacted laws and various agency activities.

CRS's analytic capabilities integrate multiple disciplines and research methodologies. In a fast-paced, ever-changing environment, CRS provides Congress with the vital, analytical support it needs to address the most complex public policy issues facing the nation. Its work incorporates program and legislative expertise, quantitative methodologies, and legal and economic analysis.
