The Portrait Came With Numbers George Cummings

“Welcome to the Tea Room. I have been expecting you...,” expresses an invitation and a caution at the open doorway into the novel’s interior.

A carelessly wrapped box, van Gogh’s ‘Starry Night’, my old flame, a Bull Terrier pup stolen, a new love discovered, a mysterious cottage, a disguised manuscript, ‘Wheatfield with Crows’, an asylum window’s view, an attempted murder, self-portraiture defined; love, betrayal, murder, a fish pond, a drowned body, a fortune teller, the tea leaves interpreted, an old flame followed, a painting exhibition, cubism defined, a mystery explained, a pup returned, an identity exposed and the truth revealed.

The Tale, The Teller and The Reader are the stages of initiation into a world of fiction where the reader becomes the main character in the novel. How?

“...You have paid the price of admission. The tea and the telling are inclusive. Drink your tea. No tipping, please. And do not disturb the leaves. They will be my responsibility when you are done. Are you finished? But don’t rush, even though there is a line-up outside the curtain.”
